REPORTS

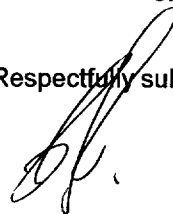

that on April 10, Cynthia Clontz, Dean of Wright's Continuing Education and Training served as one of four panelists at a workshop on "Developing the Skills: The Role of Community Colleges in IT Workforce Development," at the third annual National IT Workforce Convocation; and that Clontz spoke on the "Xpedior/Wright College Partnership" in which Wright is creating customized four month Certificate Program to train an untapped pool of incumbent workers for immediate placement with Xpedior; and that speakers from 40 community colleges throughout the country responded to the invitation to present reports of successful programs, but only four panelists were chosen; and that the workshop was comprised of a panel discussion that focused on how community colleges play a role with Information Technology firms in providing trained workers for the industry.
