THE CHANCELLOR

REPORTS

that Stephanie Hong Owen, Librarian, attended the National Association of Developmental Education (NADE) conference located in Greensboro, North Carolina from February 25-28, 2009. She served as a moderator for several presentations, such as Dr. Constance Staley's presentation on "Calibrating Cognitive Machinery and Teaching Strategies to Help First-Year Students Get in Gear" and Ms. Lynn Flowers's "Reading Instruction Aligned with a Theory of Cognition/Learning Theory." In addition to attending various workshops and lectures on the topic of developmental education, she volunteered for the Books for Kids Literacy Project. Books for Kids is a non-profit organization that makes books available to children at no cost to help promote the love of reading. This organization raises funds to provide books for children working through a variety of qualified groups such as The Salvation Army, YMCA, numerous churches, shelters, orphanages, as well as various state agencies.

Respectfully submitted,

Wayne D. Watson
