PROFESSOR SURVEYS ADJUNCTS FOR CCC CAPSTONE PROJECT TRUMAN COLLEGE

THE CHANCELLOR

REPORTS that Communications professor Franklin Reynolds, as his Capstone Project for the year-long CCC Leadership Academy, created “Truman's Adjunct Faculty: An Evaluation of Orientation and Faculty Development;” and that he conducted a survey of adjuncts that evaluated Truman's new adjunct faculty orientation, as well as professional development opportunities for part-time faculty; and that 44 percent of all part-time faculty responded to the survey (86 of the 195 current adjuncts representing all the academic and technical departments), a high response rate that will allow the administration to gauge the thoughts of current adjuncts on a variety of topics (orientation, professional development, and organizational climate); and that the data collected will not only be used to help make orientation more effective, but will also help create professional development workshops, handouts, and college strategies for training adjuncts in a variety of topics (from classroom instruction to campus topics/resources).

Respectfully submitted,

Cheryl L. Hyman
Chancellor
